Payomet Circus Comes to T.C.S.

Have you ever wished that you could run away and join the circus? Well, students at Truro Central School had the chance to do just that! Members of the Payomet Circus joined students during their physical education classes to learn some acrobatics and juggling. While learning various circus acts, students were practicing eye-hand coordination, balance, teamwork.

Spring Concert

On May 24th, students showed off their musical chops during our annual Truro Central School Spring Concert. Once again, music teacher Dana Ayers organized a wonderful evening where students sang, danced, and performed various instruments. Student artwork curated by art teacher Kim Possee also adorned the stage and was projected during the concert's whole school finale. Highlights of the concert included a combined effort of the chorus, band and string ensembles playing Survivor's "Eye of the Tiger", Fourth and Fifth Grade's performance of John Denver's "Country Roads", Second and Third Grade's moving rendition of "We Are the World", and a lilting "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree" sung by Kindergarten and First Graders. If you missed the concert, check the Truro Central School website (truromass.org) for a video of this spring's concert!

Farmer in the School

Along with the warmer weather and leafing trees, Farmer Stephanie returns to Truro Central School to mentor students in tending our school gardens. Students have been tilling the soil, fertilizing the gardens, planting seedlings and harvesting some of the kale they planted earlier in the season.

On May 25th, the students also worked with Farmer Stephanie and a nutritionist at the Truro Public Library. They explored the seed library, added seeds they harvested last fall, and discussed how healthy food choices affect our health. Students also sampled herbal tea, kale smoothies, and a cold-pressed kale juice made from local produce, including kale from our own Truro Central School gardens.

The seed library is open to the entire community, so if you would like to see some of the student designed seed packets and try planting some of Truro Central School's favorite vegetables, feel free to visit it at the Truro Public Library! Also, stay tuned to truromass.org to view a video of Kindergarten's impromptu kale party!
